Initial reports from ISIS-controlled Al A'amaq Agency blamed the Coalition for the deaths of two civilians. Subsequent reporting echoed that account (they may have been based on Al A'amaq), Al Jarnia and several other outlets named the two civilians as Abd al Ghani Al Sahoud and Moussa al Zagheer. They also noted that the town was the cite of shelling by Kurdish militias as well as coalition strikes. Shaam News Network also cited Coalition raids and said that "a number" of civilians were also wounded. The Syrian Network said the Coalition was responsible. Step News agency reported that the coalition targeted Al Jarnia with 3 raids "which centered on IS positions and cars in the city center killing two civilians and wounded several others." It noted that ISIL had clashed with the Kurdish led Syrian Democratic Forces in the area. However, a subsequent Smart News report put the toll of Coalition strikes in Jarnia at four civilians and a further five wounded.
